Si la guerre a toujours fait partie de l'histoire des sociétés humaines, depuis la nuit des temps,¹ personne n'aurait imaginé l'ampleur que prendrait la Première Guerre mondiale, connue aussi communément par le nom de la Grande Guerre de 1914-18, non seulement au niveau des faits² et des événements à caractères multiples qui l'avaient marquée, mais aussi au niveau des écrits notamment historiques que le conflit avait suscités et engendrés partout dans le monde, est ce, à partir de 1914 jusqu'à nos jours.³

Lors de l'élaboration de ce dossier thématique dédié à la Grande Guerre au Maghreb, et tout en étant conscients de l'existence d'une information très abondante, et sous plusieurs formes, sur les écrits la concernant, nous avons tenu à dresser une bibliographie sélective, de la littérature historique produite sur le sujet entre les années 2000 et 2018, avec une focalisation étendue et plus précise à la fois, sur les écrits académiques relatifs à ce qui s'est passé dans l'espace africain, méditerranéen et maghrébin.

Nous avons tenu aussi à nous intéresser de très près aux publications les plus récentes relatives aux nouveaux champs d'investigations et aux nouvelles pistes de recherches⁴ à caractère multidisciplinaire que les événements de la Grande Guerre n'avaient pas cessé de susciter, durant un siècle, auprès non seulement des historiens, mais aussi des sociologues, des anthropologues, des politologues, des médecins et autres spécialistes de sciences humaines et
